About Wiki-DJ

What Is Wiki-DJ?

Wiki-DJ is a community-powered platform for DJs, producers, and music crews to create and curate their own artist pages. Born out of frustration with rigid “notability” requirements on sites like Wikipedia, Wiki-DJ is an inclusive space where electronic music culture speaks for itself — without gatekeepers.

If you're part of the scene, your story belongs here.

Origin Story

Our founders tried to publish a DJ bio on Wikipedia, only to be told the artist “wasn't notable enough.” That moment sparked something bigger: the need for a space where artists define their worth — not moderators with arbitrary standards.

Wiki-DJ is built by artists, for artists. The goal is simple: empower the community to document its contributions, without compromise.

Where We’re At

We're currently in soft-launch. That means:

- Artists can build their own profiles
- Crews can document events, collectives, and creative projects
- Labels, venues, and collaborations are welcome
- Early users can shape moderation and site development
- We're testing features, gathering feedback, and evolving in real-time

If you're reading this, you're early. Help us lay the foundations of the most community-authored DJ encyclopedia on the web.

Core Values

* No Gatekeepers – Your page won’t be deleted for “notability.” Create freely. * Community-Led – Moderation and relevance are determined by the artists and crews who use the site. * Built for Electronic Culture – Whether you're a warehouse selector or festival veteran, your voice matters.

Join the Movement

We’re seeking contributors to help shape the platform:

- Design structured schemas for artists, labels, and crews
- Build namespaces for scenes and events
- Improve search, tags, and metadata
- Help moderate and guide editorial direction
- Co-create help docs and artist templates

If you’re a digital archivist, wiki nerd, visual storyteller, or just love preserving culture — this is your chance to make an impact.

Your Music. Your Story. Your Page.

Are you a DJ, producer, or part of a music crew? Tired of being told your work isn’t “notable” enough? We hear you. That's why Wiki-DJ exists.
